SCOPE: This presentation will examine the personal life of one of America's early surveyor's. By reading excerpts from his many letters he wrote to his wife the audience will be able to look into the everyday life of America's Colonial surveyors. We will be able to live in the survey camps and to feel the sadness of his life, a life that was spent in the service of his country, America. .

A husband, a father, a patriot and an American will be examined by his letters and his own words will transport us back 200 years to a time when America was just a dream in the hopes of a few men.
